

STELLA POLARIS PUBLISHING

Foundations of Faith

A Conversation Guide for Parents & Children

"Faith is the evidence of things not yet seen. It is infinite belief in yourself and the systems that support you."

7 CONVERSATION CARDS

Before You Begin

Most of us learned about faith in a place that also taught us our limits.

Maybe it was church. Maybe it was a grandmother who prayed every morning and still spoke about her life like it had a ceiling. Maybe it was people who loved God deeply and genuinely and still could not imagine that the divine lived inside them too -- not just above them.

That gap -- between devotion and self-belief, between faith in something bigger and faith in yourself as part of that something -- is what this is about.

Because here is what most of us were never taught: humility was never meant to make you small. And faith was never meant to have a limit.

Your child is watching you navigate that gap right now. These conversations are how you close it. For them. And for yourself.

Faith is simply this: the belief that more is possible. That you are supported. That life does not have a ceiling. Your child already knows this. These conversations are how you remind them. And maybe how you remind yourself.

A NOTE BEFORE YOU BEGIN

These cards are not a curriculum. They are not a test. There are no wrong answers -- not from your child and not from you. Each card has a question for your child and a question for you first. Do not skip yours. What you have not resolved in yourself will speak louder than anything you say out loud.

Safety

WHAT THIS IS REALLY ABOUT

Safety is not just the absence of danger. It is a felt sense -- something the body knows before the mind catches up. Many of us grew up in homes where we were physically safe but emotionally or spiritually unsafe. We learned to perform calm while carrying tension.

Safety -- true safety -- is the feeling that you are allowed to exist fully. That your thoughts are welcome. That your questions will not be punished. That is what we are building in this conversation.

FOR YOU FIRST

Where do you feel safe? Not where you are supposed to feel safe -- where do you actually feel it? If you struggle to answer that, sit with the struggle. A child learns what safety feels like by feeling it in your presence. You cannot give what you have not found.

START HERE

What is your favorite place to be?

THEN GO HERE

What does it feel like when you are there? Does your body feel different?

THEN LAND HERE

Where do you feel that same feeling even when you are not in that place?

IF THEY GO QUIET

Stay with the favorite place. Ask them to describe it like they are painting a picture. What color is it? What does it smell like? Let them build it fully. The feeling will follow the detail. You are not in a hurry.

Love

WHAT THIS IS REALLY ABOUT

Love is the most used and least examined word in most households. Children absorb what love does long before they understand what love is. They learn love from how they are held, corrected, celebrated, and disappointed.

This card gives love a language. When a child can describe what love feels like in their body -- warm, heavy, expanding, still -- they build an internal reference point they can return to for the rest of their lives.

FOR YOU FIRST

What makes you feel loved? Not what you know love is supposed to look like -- what actually lands for you? What you believe love feels like is what your child is learning love feels like. This is not blame. This is an opening.

START HERE

What is something that makes you feel really good inside -- like your whole self is smiling?

THEN GO HERE

What does that feeling feel like in your body? Is it warm or cool? Does it feel big or small?

THEN LAND HERE

Do you think that feeling has a name? Do you think love is always a feeling or can it be something else too?

IF THEY GO QUIET

Come back to the concrete. Ask them about a specific moment -- a time someone did something kind. Specificity unlocks feeling. Let them tell you a story first. The philosophy will follow.

Help & Source

WHAT THIS IS REALLY ABOUT

Every person has a belief about where help comes from. Most have never been asked to name it. Some believe it comes from people. Some from something invisible. Some believe help is not really available to them at all.

This card is not about installing a specific belief. It is about making your child's existing belief conscious so it can be examined and if necessary expanded.

FOR YOU FIRST

What do you believe about where help comes from? Many of us were taught to pray but not to expect an answer. We performed faith without fully believing we were heard. You cannot teach a child to reach for what you have stopped reaching for yourself.

START HERE

Tell me about a time something worked out when you were not sure it would.

THEN GO HERE

What do you think made that happen?

THEN LAND HERE

Do you think there is something bigger than us that helps sometimes? What do you think that is?

IF THEY GO QUIET

Do not push toward theology. Go back to the story. The feeling of hope -- of leaning toward a good outcome -- is itself an act of faith. Name it for them. That feeling? That is what it feels like to believe something good is possible.

Intuition

WHAT THIS IS REALLY ABOUT

Intuition is the part of you that knows before you know why. Children are often more intuitive than adults because they have not yet learned to override what they feel with what they think.

This card is an act of preservation. You are validating your child's inner knowing before the world teaches them to distrust it. When a parent says I believe you felt that -- something in a child settles permanently.

FOR YOU FIRST

When did you last trust your gut? When did you last override it and regret it? Reconnecting with your own intuition -- even in small ways -- is what makes this conversation credible to your child. They will feel whether you believe it.

START HERE

Have you ever just known something before anyone told you?

THEN GO HERE

Where did that knowing come from? Did it feel like a thought or more like a feeling in your body?

THEN LAND HERE

Do you think everyone has that? Do you think it has a name?

IF THEY GO QUIET

Try this: Have you ever walked into a room and felt something -- happy, weird, uncomfortable -- before anything even happened? Most children have a vivid memory of exactly this. Start there.

Ancestors

WHAT THIS IS REALLY ABOUT

Children are not afraid of death the way adults are. They are afraid of loss. This card is not about death. It is about continuity -- about the part of love that does not end when a person is no longer physically present.

Consider that love -- real love -- may be one of the few things that does not have an end. Let your child feel that as true rather than just being told it.

FOR YOU FIRST

Who are you still carrying? Many people feel their loved ones and have been taught to dismiss it -- to call it grief rather than connection. If you are not sure what you believe, that is okay. I am not sure but I like to think... is one of the most faithful things a parent can say.

START HERE

Who is someone you love that makes you really happy when you think about them?

THEN GO HERE

Is there someone you love who is not here anymore? What do you miss most about them?

THEN LAND HERE

Do you ever feel like they are still with you somehow? What does that feel like?

IF THEY GO QUIET

This one is allowed to be quiet. Sit in it with them. If they cry, let them. If you cry, let them see that too. Grief and love are the same thing wearing different clothes.

Questions

WHAT THIS IS REALLY ABOUT

The ability to ask a question you do not expect to be answered immediately is a spiritual muscle. Many adults have stopped asking because they stopped believing anything was listening.

But silence is not absence. A question released into the universe with genuine openness has a way of being answered -- sometimes immediately, sometimes years later, sometimes in a form you did not expect.

FOR YOU FIRST

What question are you sitting with right now that you have not asked out loud? What have you stopped asking because you stopped believing an answer would come? This card has a way of surfacing things in parents that have been waiting a long time.

START HERE

If you could know the answer to any question in the whole world, what would you want to know?

THEN GO HERE

Who or what would you want to answer it?

THEN LAND HERE

Do you think it is possible to ask a question and just wait and see if the answer shows up? Have you ever tried that?

IF THEY GO QUIET

Try this: If you could ask a star, a tree, an animal, or the ocean a question -- what would you ask? Giving them a non-traditional recipient sometimes frees the question itself.

Original Knowing

WHAT THIS IS REALLY ABOUT

Every child arrives already knowing something. Before school. Before church. Before you. They come in with something intact -- a sense of who they are, what matters, what is true.

This card is an attempt to find that knowing before too many layers have settled. What your child tells you here -- if you receive it without correction -- is one of the most honest things you will ever hear from them. Take your time.

FOR YOU FIRST

What did you come in knowing that you have spent your whole life trying to remember? That is your original knowing. It did not come from a book or a church or a parent. It came with you. This card is an invitation to honor it.

START HERE

What is something you are really good at that feels easy and natural -- like you were just born knowing how to do it?

THEN GO HERE

Is there something you just believe -- not because anyone told you -- that you have always felt was true?

THEN LAND HERE

Where do you think that knowing came from? Do you think you were born with it?

IF THEY GO QUIET

Is there something that just feels true to you even if you have never heard anyone else say it? If they still go quiet -- write the question down together. Some answers need time to arrive. The willingness to wait is itself a foundation of faith.

These seven conversations are not a destination.
They are a beginning.

Faith is not something you install in a child. It is something you tend -- slowly, consistently, with patience and presence. You are doing that now. That is enough.

Nova & the Magic of Faith

Now available on Amazon

stellapolarispublishing.com

